Letter from the Editor

To Our Readers,

As always, I would like to thank all contributing authors and staff members that helped produce this newly released Spring 2011 issue. We've made some improvements to our operations that we believe made this semester's experience even more enjoyable.

Our Editorial Board, Line Editors, and Staff Editors have worked diligently on this issue and have grown as both editors and law students over the past year. The time, effort and unflinching enthusiasm contributed by everyone are critical in producing a product of which we are all proud.

This semester we were privileged to host our annual symposium along with the Criminal Law Society. The event featured many interesting speakers discussing topics relevant in the criminal law community. Both organizations are tremendously grateful for the panelists volunteering their time to share their ideas with us. We hope that everyone who was able to attend found the panelists, topics and discussion enthralling.

At the end of this academic year our current board will be stepping down to make way for the newly elected group of board members. Leading the team as Editor-In-Chief will be Monica Trigoso, a current staff member, who will be joined by Jason Navia, Abre' Conner, Jennifer Ponder, Shuaa Tajammul and Stephanie Cannuli. We are confident that this group of students will do a great job in growing the Criminal Law Brief and furthering its goals.

This past year was one of much development for both our team and the publication. I am proud to have been a part of a very talented team for a publication that I am sure will continue to acquire readership and thrive as a source for informative and significant criminal law content.
